Adobe is a company that is committed to Creative Cloud, but it's not as strong as its promise to the customers. That's why we're prioritising updates to Photoshop CC, not software such as Photoshop Elements, and the companion apps for Photoshop CC. In this way, we're building creative apps that we know our customers will need to sustain their work, and that they trust to be there for them for years to come. These apps are all part of Creative Cloud for the long haul, everyone included. Ps.I did not reply about Photoshop application on MAC operating system. Because Mac OS is compatible with Adobe Photoshop CC 2017 application, a user needn't worry about whether to get the digital art and photo edition album (i.e. if it is designed for Windows and Adobe Photoshop CC 2017). It SEEMS (beyond just my personal speculation) you can't do that, (however needed, Photoshop will not be completely useless on the MAC if you know how to use it with other file formats). I have a similar circumstance - I NEED to use Photoshop on the MAC platform and have him stopped using Photoshop and downloaded Paint brush - which IS NOT AN EXACT REPLICA of Photoshop. (Of course there are many Photoshop apps out there, but it should include ALL the tools Photoshop will have in the future) Love the direction you are going with rolling updates but I'm curious why it is so limited when it comes to the Creative Cloud apps. As a user who has invested heavily in the products, it would be nice to know if major updates are coming to the subscription apps.
