I've been playing around with Photoshop lately and I'm wondering if anyone can help me. Every time I try and save a picture I get an error message on the program that says \"this file was changed by another user or program. Save this file without opening it\" or something along those lines. It's a really annoying message and I'd like to be able to get rid of it. I'm also having trouble saving files with the correct file type. I've tried using ImageReady and Photoshop at the same time so that I can save it as the correct format but I can't get both programs working at the same time. Any ideas?

New features in the face-unveiling reveal Polyvox, which is a way of letting selected parts of portraits appear different from each other in the (conceptual) 3D mode. It's actually portable. With a device and a 3D-ready computer, you can use Photoshop without its own 3D tools to create and view 3D content. Check out this high-resolution image editing demo (available in both Photoshop and Lightroom, plus one for each of those apps' new iPad version, available only Monday). I didn't even know you could do so much with an iPad, but the idea that you can use an iPad to shoot, edit, and export to all sorts of formats, is pretty cool.

Many of us will spend longer working on a project than we care to admit to. In fact, we will often tie up projects, only to feel frustrated at the end that we can't give the client the finished product they were expecting. Other than the time that was spent creating that product, the time must also be accounted for. Sometimes we only have a few hours to create the page and a few lines of code to get the job done, so efficient use of our time is key. While this usually includes the time we spend drawing, in most cases, the code we write takes a lot longer than all of that. It's easy to fall into the trap of starting early and always finding we are running out of time. If you always start your project with a 2 week deadline and then find it's taking three or four months, you can ruin a client's relationship because the work just isn't done by the time they want it. Selective color modes can reduce the appearance of color casts and ghosting by changing the values of the colors in an image. In this mode, the individual values of the colors are determined by the settings of the color palette, which may be different for each raster channel. Using color modes can be a difficult process, however, because it requires you to be familiar with color theory and understand the way that the colors interact with one another. In this way, color modes are similar to levels modes in Photoshop. On the other hand, the special purpose features in Elements are designed to cater to the types of clients who may not have access to the paid software or the degrees of professionals who are comfortable working on a Windows PC. As such, tools that can be explored in Elements are geared for those still learning the ropes of image editing.
